THE BOUQUET. TO ----- [BY LARRY LEE.] Lady, I send thee these,—and rarer gems Ne'er graced Elysian fields, nor decked a brow. Fairer than her's, whose virgin lovelight sends
Its gentle radiance to my memory now.
A voice is on the waters, and I fain

Would list its flutelike accents on the air, Hailing the hour, whose rising orb shall name, Thy marriage morn, the fairest of the fair. Thou ask'st of me a boon; I give it thee, And when its last frail note shall greet thy ear, Let not its feeble echo be to thee Tuneless, or unfelt by memory's tear;

Lady, fare thee well! these to thee shall speak.

Of loves still warmer than the noon-day beams; Take them and press them to thy sunny cheek, Breathe their sweet fragrance in thy peaceful dreams: On place them on thy bosom, place them there, And let their breathings mingle fresh with thine.

And let the jasmins round thy temples twine: Bathed in the crystal dews of eventide, I send bright flowers, hailing thee happy bride! For the National Intelligencer.

TO MY BOYS. Boys! your lives are all before you. Be they short or be they long-Whether good or ill come o'er you, Never give nor take a wrong: But stick together.

Place this pale Aster in thy raven hair.

Ne er forget the kindred tie, And should tate bereavements send you, Cling together till you die; Yes! stick together. If success in life should vary,

Some be rich and some be poor,

Should kind fortune's smiles attend you,

Let not riches make you airy; Never seorn the poor one's door; But stick together. Time and chance may alter cases, And the rich ones soon be poor, While the poor ones take the places

That the rich ones held before;

Then, stick together

But stick together.

Should temptation lure a brother From the path he should pursue, Crush him not, but rather smother Anger with affection trees, And stick together. Blood than water sure is thicker When its fountain is the same; Then kindred surely should not bicker, And only kindred be in name,

The time, my sons, is fast approaching When I'll slumber with the dead; Then let me feel when death's ancreaching, And all the hopes of life are fled, You'll stick together. For in this weary world of ours, The victors are the just and true, If they'll unite their kindred powers

And each to each their duty do, And stick together.

"We regard the subject of fertilizers so important to our farmers and planters that we do not intend to allow ourselves to be betrayed into a careless expression of opinion, and hence we have examined his (Rhodes) claim with care.
